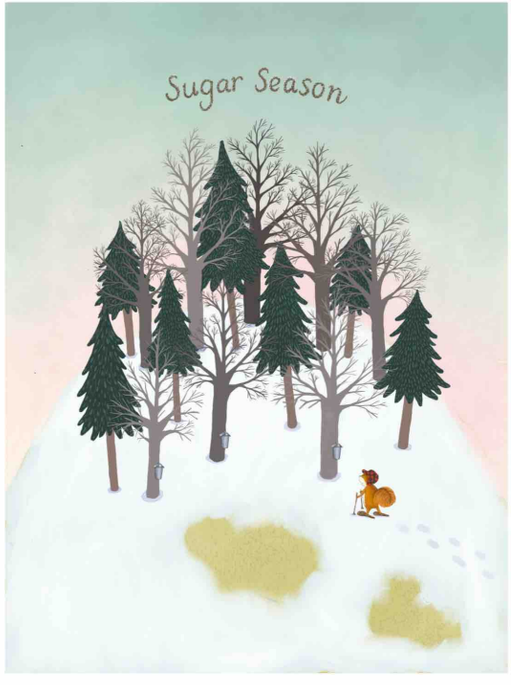
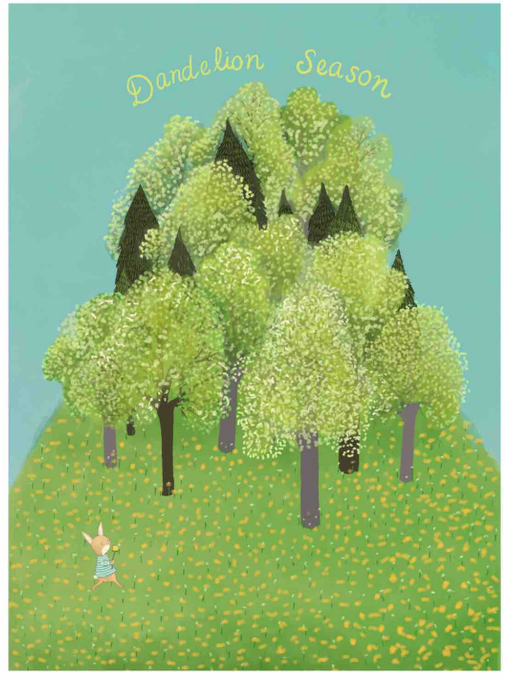
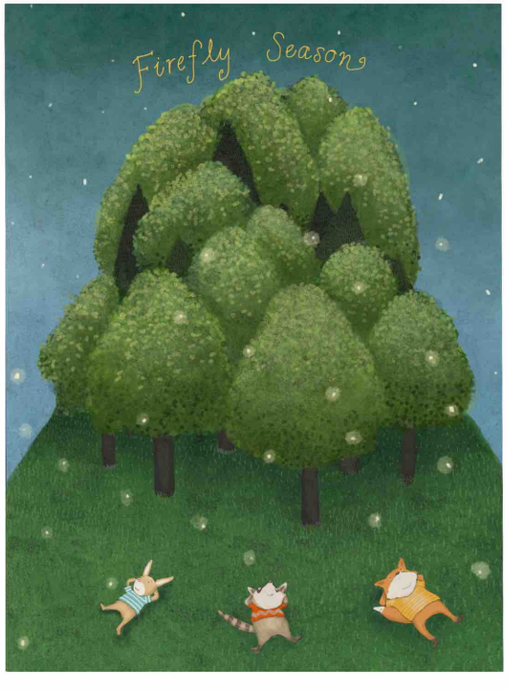
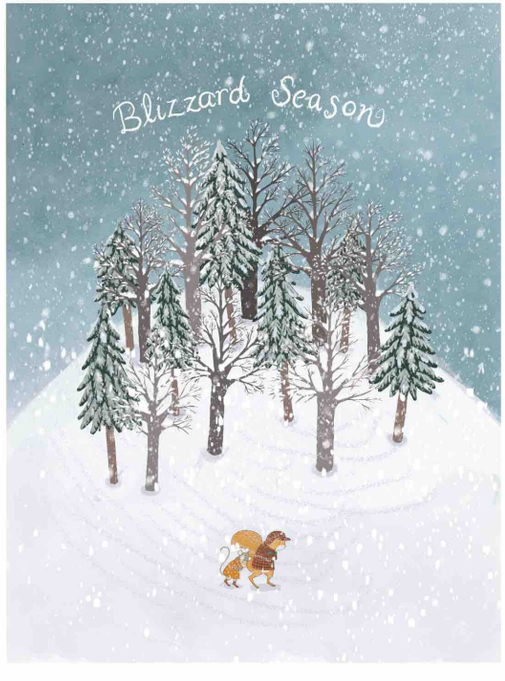
I am inspired by the ordinary magic I see every day on the mountain where I live.









I could stay here forever, watching the seasons go by.

I sometimes wonder if I've put myself in a pigeon hole.

Hey!
What's wrong with pigeon holes?
I find mine quite comfortable.

I grew up in a small town with a large pond. For the first half of the summer, we would have swimming lessons every day, rain or shine. The water was never warm, and the bottom was squishy.

I wanted more. I had big dreams. I wanted a pony.

CALAMITY COVE (story in development)

When swimming lessons were over, we would go to the coast of Maine to visit my mother's strange and mysterious family.

I liked the gloomy days as much as the sunny ones.

On those days, I would find a quiet place to curl up with a book, and let my imagination take flight.

More often than not, these flights of fancy would lead me back to the woods, where I felt most at home.

Welcome to Tweed Hill, where the winters are long and the summers are sweet, and every season brings a mystery.

Whether skating under the full moon in the late winter, or sharing sleepy secrets by the light of fireflies on a warm summer evening, Tilly and her friends enjoy life on Tweed Hill. But things aren't always as they seem, and sometimes mysterious things happen. Tilly, a cheerful, ernest mouse takes it upon herself to set things right.

No matter the season, Tilly and her friends can often be found gathered together over cups of hot butternut milk at Petunia's General Store, where no problem is so large that it can't be solved with a cookie.
